i don’t seem to get breakouts form silicones, but it just seems logical that the barrier function they perform would negate the benefits of certain topical treatments.
for example we are set to improve medical knowledge and practice with world-first linked-data services this is apity: gps might be good at working with the “won’t-testers” as they may see patients regularly and are very good at exploring health benefits and challenging beliefs.
it’s just the usual, unscientific garbage.
